It takes one moment to find fame

The Soccer World Cup final took almost two hours of play to reach 0-0. Then in a flash Andres Iniesta of Spain found his moment of fame which will reward him for a lifetime.

Read the story of photographer Alfred Eisenstaedt. He was with a gaggle of news reporters photographing Goebbels in 1933. "When the others had left the room I stayed and stood there, waiting. Alone. Then Goebbels looked up at me and made a nasty face. I didn't wither. I got the shot."

Sometimes we must trust our instinct to go early, stay late, shift to the far side of the field, or move behind the podium. Go far from the madding crowd.

That's when we can get something special. Try it.

Photographers Nicki Maud and Susie Peacock

both studied digital photography with NZIBS, but they now follow quite different paths. They are active members of Auckland Photographic Society. Click www.aps.net.nz to see Nicki's B&W character portrait of a woman she saw operating a stall at La Cigale French Market in Auckland.

Nicki Maud was invited to visit France to take the photographs when foodie Elizabeth Lind conducted field research into French village markets. "My feet hardly touched the ground" she said. "We were on the go the whole time but it was a marvellous experience."

Susie Peacock mostly photographs models and clothes for her retail website www.eurodesignerclothing.co.nz She has access to pre-loved couture clothing from top European designers. Look for garments by dozens of famous names like Chanel, Armani and Prada. Yes, you can buy off her website.
